THE CHRISTMAS DINNER

Nothing should be spared to make the Christmas dinner a success, both in the decorations, of which the keynote should be red to suggest warmth and cheer, and in the dinner itself, which should be rich without being too long and elaborate, for after all Christmas is a family celebration, and the "home" atmosphere should not be lost. Here is a suggestion for a Christmas dinner which can be retrenched or added to as one wishes:

MENU FOR CHRISTMAS.

There never was such a goose. * * * And when the long expected gush of stuffing issued forth one murmur of delight arose around the board, and even Tiny Tim beat on the table with his knife and feebly cried, "Hurrah!"—Dickens' Christmas Carol.

Blue Points.
Clear Turtle Soup.
Pim Oles. Cheese Souffle in Cases.
Boiled Salmon, Hollandaise Sauce.
Cucumbers.
Sweetbread Patties la Financiere.
Roman Punch.
Roast Goose with Apple Sauce.
Potatoes Parisienne. Squash.
Onions Boiled in Cream.
Chicory and Escarole Salad.
Plum Pudding with Brandy Sauce.
Mince Pie. Santa Claus Glace.
Fruits. Camembert Cheese.
(a la Noir).

CHEESE SOUFFLE IN CASES.—Melt in a small saucepan two ounces of butter. Remove from fire, and when nearly cold add the yolks of six eggs. Return the saucepan to the fire, stirring until beginning to thicken, when instantly remove; add four ounces of American cheese grated, a quarter of a teaspoonful of white pepper and the same of salt; beat the whites to a stiff froth and add them to the cheese preparation. Butter six small paper boxes, set them on a tin pan and place in a medium hot oven for ten minutes. Remove, and when cold fill them with the above preparation, return the cases to the oven and bake from 10 to 15 minutes till done.

SANTA CLAUS GLACE.—Strawberry, pistachio ice cream and lemon sherbet frozen in little Santa Claus molds.

Appropriate dinner favors in the shape of red satin bonbon boxes decorated with holly or other little Christmas emblems can be procured from any caterer.

Now, as regards the table decorations, they should of course be red and green. A pretty idea is to place the table directly underneath the chandelier. Drape that in holly and mistletoe and cover the globes with red crepe paper shades so cut as to resemble single roses.

THE BIG WIND.

A Christmas Story of Ireland.

BY ERNEST JARROLD.

It was Christmas eve. A roaring blaze of hickory logs sent fiery sparks through the wide mouthed chimney out into the night. Snow and hail beat upon the cottage, and angry winds banged the shutters to and fro. Outside were darkness and the tempest, but inside were warmth, mirth, fraternity.

"Tis a wild night," said Mrs. Mad den as she peered into the darkness through the frosted window panes. "I hope the goat will take no harm."

"You needn't worry about him, mother," said her son Larry. "Sure I gave him two bundles of hay and an odd straw hat. He'll not be cold or hungry the night."

"Sit you down, Mary," said her husband. "Tis no time for worry, woman. Here's a glass of punch. Tickle your tongue with that. Here, childer, come here till I give you some sarsaparilla. Come, Grady, and Moriarty and Mrs. Malone and Ellen. Bring your 'cordion, O'Connor. Hurroo! Ellen, your foot is light as a thistle on a spider's web. Whack the flure, your trotters shake! Good luck to you! I'm glad the good saints let me live to see this Christmas eve."

'Twas a goodly sight to see. The kitchen was crowded with the neighbors. O'Connor sat upon the wood box, jerking the animated camera. Rheumatic Mrs. Malone and Ellen Riley were dancing in the middle of the floor. The children were huddled, with hands on knees, in a circle around the lively couple. But above the squeaking of the accordion and the jocund laughter of youth boomed the thunder of the tempest outside.

The music came to a sudden stop as two bricks fell down the chimney into the fire and a crashing blow almost broke the door from its hinges.

"Tis the big wind of Ireland comin' again," groaned Mrs. Malone, just as another brick fell down the chimney.
